

To the editor, The Obama Presidency - Liberal Academia's Brainchild
To: natweekly@washingtontimes.com
Date: Thursday, April 21, 2011, 6:10 AM

To the Editor,

I am beginning to think that Barack Obama is the first Presidential product of our public schools' progressive indoctrination system. Granted he spent many of his elementary days in schools outside of the United States but he surely absorbed every last drop of liberal "knowledge" here.

But that's the problem. Like many of the young minds he now attempts to shanghai, his was satiated with liberal academia's utopian vision of the world. His mind was perfectly infused with "what" to think, instead of "how" to think. His solutions to problems are simply drawn from memory. Teamwork and groupthink are the implements of his policies. That's the way he was taught to get things done.

And like so many students who are shocked when they enter the world of reality, he has found that he was not taught the truth. That's why he now has to embrace the Bush policies he previously abhorred. That's why he lets his peers design the plans he promotes.

President Obama is their perfect brainchild, which explains their transcendent adoration of him. He represents the ultimate product of their efforts - and the reason we need school choice.

David Richard Crawmer, North Greenbush NY